

Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.

Effective approaches to working with male perpetrators of domestic violence in New Zealand

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the Degree of Master of Philosophy in International Development at Massey University, Manawatu, New Zealand

TA THITAM HA
2016

Abstract

The rate of domestic violence has been increasing around the world today. Even though women do conduct abusive acts towards men, the majority of perpetrators of domestic violence remain men. A Men and Development (MAD) framework is used as an overarching framework for the research because it is believed that problem of domestic violence cannot be tackled if men are not involved.

The purpose of this study is to investigate effective approaches to working with male perpetrators of domestic violence. The specific objective is to identify factors to be considered in programme design and delivery so as to maximize men's engagement in intervention programmes and prevent them from reoffending. The study also explores whether cultural aspects are considered when delivering programmes for perpetrators, particularly for those with Asian, Pasifika and Maori backgrounds and if yes, how much it affects programme delivery.

The data collection took place in New Zealand by interviewing people working for five organisations that have intervention programmes for male perpetrators of domestic violence. It was hoped that the research findings would provide some insights on how to establish and run a centre in Vietnam that offers intervention programmes for male perpetrators of domestic violence. Currently, such programmes do not exist in Vietnam.

The research findings show that cognitive behavioural therapy, the Duluth model, and the strengths-based approach are believed to be effective for working with male perpetrators. Programme components that are important for effective programme delivery include an initial assessment, the existence of both male and female facilitators in a team, timeout planning, and anger/anxiety management. Regarding the cultural aspects, organisations do account for the cultural backgrounds of perpetrators. For example, during the initial assessment, their clients are asked if they have any cultural requirements that the facilitators should be aware of during the programme. Particularly, some special models are used with Maori perpetrators namely the Tangi Hapi or the Mason Durie model. Maori people can do hongi (a traditional Maori greeting) or karakia (prayers or incantations) if they wish provided that other clients do not oppose this. Having a Maori facilitator in the team also plays a crucial role for effective communication and better understanding among Maori perpetrators when they take part in the programme.

The Men and Development framework is reflected in programme design and delivery in the organisations even though none of the facilitators named this framework when interviewed. For example, facilitators often talk with their male clients about the positive aspects of being a man and how this can help them improve their relationship with their partners rather than destroying it using violence. The facilitators help the clients navigate away from negative aspects of masculinities. They create conditions for men to work with men in the group, take responsibility for their violent behaviours and help one another in order to change their attitudes and behaviours towards domestic violence.

Acknowledgement

I am enormously grateful to my supervisors, Professor Regina Scheyvens and Dr Kathryn Hay, for sharing with me their knowledge and their networks in the field of development and domestic violence. Their continuous, patient, friendly and excellent guidance throughout my research has been so encouraging and enabled me to keep going on until the completion of this research. I would also like to thank Virginia Webb for her tutoring, reading and providing constructive feedback on my writing. I would like to extend my sincere thanks to all the wonderful lecturers and staff at the Institute of Development Studies, Massey University for your instructions and support during my two years at Massey University.

A huge thank you goes to all the participants of this research. I am very grateful that you welcomed me in to your organisations and spent your valuable time with me on the interviews, for your support for my study as well as for your willingness to share your knowledge and experience openly with me during and after my interviews. Without you, I certainly could not have been able to complete my research.

I would like to express my special thanks to the government of New Zealand for granting me the New Zealand ASEAN Scholar Award. The scholarship has given me an opportunity to explore this beautiful country with friendly people and to pursue my further study in the field of international development at Massey - one of the most well-known universities in New Zealand, with the Institute of Development Studies which was the first in New Zealand offering a Development Studies Programme. I would also like to thank the School of People, Environment and Planning, the Graduate Research Fund Committee and Massey University for the grant which has enabled me to travel to organisations in New Zealand to conduct the interviews for my research.

A huge thank you goes to the International Student Support Team at Massey University including Sylvia Hooker, Jamie Hooper, Sue Flynn, Dave Broderick and many others for their unconditional support during my study at Massey University. Friendship and encouragement from my fellowship post graduate students, from friends and families in Palmerston North have become part of my good memories in New Zealand.

Last but not least, I am grateful to my parents for always having faith in me and encouraging me to study. My journey in New Zealand would not have been possible without the companionship of my children, Quang and Anh. Thank you for being with me and going with me through all the ups and downs. Your presence in my life has given me strength to overcome all challenges. I believe you have learned a lot during your time in New Zealand and I hope this firm foundation will encourage you to strive yourselves until the day you can make your dreams come true.

Contents

Abstract	i
Acknowledgement	iii
Contents	iv
List of Figures	x
Abbreviation	xi
Glossary	xii
Chapter 1 Introduction	1
Rationale	1
Why study domestic violence?	1
Why intervention programmes for male perpetrators of domestic violence?	2
Why New Zealand?	3
Background	4
Conceptual framework: Men and Development	5
Perception of masculinities	6
Emergence of MAD	7
The key contributions of MAD	9
How can a MAD approach help us understand how to tackle male violence?	10
Defining domestic violence	15
Research aim, objectives and questions	16
Thesis outline	18
Conclusion	21

Chapter 2 Intervention programmes for perpetrators of domestic violence	22
Introduction	22
Domestic violence classification	22
Theories about men’s violence.....	23
The intervention system and cooperation among actors	25
Types of programmes.....	26
Group-based or individual-based programmes	27
Intensive-extensive programmes	28
One-size-fit-all programmes.....	28
Modes of referral to programmes	29
Court-ordered or self-referred modes	29
Effectiveness of programme referral methods.....	30
Indicators of effectiveness of intervention programmes.....	31
Conclusion	32
Chapter 3 Models and approaches to domestic violence intervention	33
Introduction	33
Cognitive behavioural approaches	34
The Duluth model.....	36
Combination of approaches	41
Cognitive behavioural and pro-feminist theory or feminist theory	41
The cognitive behavioural model and social learning approaches.....	42
Cognitive behavioural and anger management approaches.....	43
Cultural issues in programme design and delivery	44
Importance of cultural considerations in programme design and delivery	44

Ensuring cultural awareness in intervention programmes.....	45
Cultural awareness in intervention programmes in New Zealand	45
Maori or Pasifika frameworks for intervention programmes in New Zealand	46
Te Whare Tapa Wha – The Mason Durie model	46
The Mauri Ora framework	48
Nga Vaka o Kaiga Tapu: A Pacific Conceptual Framework.....	48
Other common approaches in New Zealand.....	51
Restorative Justice	51
Strengths-based approaches/GLM (Good Lives Model)	53
How to design and deliver intervention programmes to achieve effectiveness?.....	55
Conclusion	57
Chapter 4: Methodology	60
Introduction	60
Qualitative research	60
Triangulation	61
Use of triangulation in the research methodology	61
The methods used	62
Interview	62
Observation	64
Document analysis	65
Ethical considerations	66
Harm	66
Informed consent.....	67
Confidentiality and anonymity	68

Research procedures.....	68
Getting into the field/contacting organisations	69
The research participants/interviewees	70
Reciprocity and remuneration	71
Interview protocol	72
Data collection.....	72
Data analysis.....	73
Reflexivity	75
Positionality	76
Conclusion	77
Chapter 5: Summary of findings	78
Introduction	78
The organisations	78
Manline	79
Horowhenua Family Violence Intervention Programme Inc. (HFVIP)	79
Tauawhi Men’s Centre in Gisborne (Tauawhi)	80
Whanganui Living Without Violence Trust (WLWVT)	81
Service Provider X.....	81
Pre-programme.....	82
Initial assessment process	82
Programme elements	86
Intervention stage/in-programme.....	93
Impact of values, beliefs and attitudes	93
Practice approaches.....	95

Tangi Hapi and Transactional Analysis.....	99
Couple counselling and contacting partners	105
Participant and facilitator roles	107
Cultural considerations	109
Involvement of significant others	112
Post-programme	112
Measuring effectiveness.....	112
Challenges for organisations.....	114
Conclusion	119
Chapter 6 Discussions of the findings	121
Introduction	121
Discussion on sub-question 1:.....	122
Discussion on sub-question 2:.....	127
Conclusion	130
Chapter 7 Conclusion and implications	132
How do the findings about effective approaches to working with male perpetrators of domestic violence align with the MAD framework?	132
Limitations of the study	136
Recommendations from facilitators	138
Implications, reflections, and recommendations for application in Vietnam	139
Appendices	145
Appendix 1: Information sheet sent to participants	145
Appendix 2: Invitation letters to participants	147
Appendix 3: Questions for interviews	148

Appendix 4: Participant consent form.....	149
References	150

List of Figures

Figure 1.1: The thesis outline with MAD as the overarching framework.....	18
Figure 3.1: The Duluth Model of Power and Control wheel.....	37
Figure 3.2: The Duluth model's Equality Wheel.....	39
Figure 3.3: The Mason Durie model (the Whare Tapa Wha model)	47
Figure 5.1: Transactional analysis	101
Figure 5.2: The Kakano (seed) in the Tangi Hapi model	101
Figure 5.3: A seed illustrated by HFVIP	103

Abbreviation

CBT	Cognitive Behaviour Therapy
CSAP	Correctional Services Accreditation Panel
GAD	Gender and Development
HFVIP	Horowhenua Family Violence Intervention Programme Inc.
MAD	Men and Development
MOJ	The Ministry of Justice
TA	Transactional Analysis
UK	United Kingdom
UNFPA	United Nations Population Fund
USA	The United States of America
WID	Women in Development
WLWVT	Whanganui Living Without Violence Trust

Glossary

Hongi	a traditional Maori greeting in which people press their noses together.
Karakia	prayers or incantations
Taha wairua	spiritual well-being (e.g. meaning, and purpose in life)
Taha hinengaro	mental and emotional well-being (e.g. constructive thoughts and feelings)
Taha tinana	physical health
Tahe whanau	extended family
Ta ao Maori	the Maori world
Whakapapa	kinship
Tikanga	Maori beliefs and values
Wairua	self-realisation
Tapu	self-esteem
Mauri	inner values, sense of power
Mana	other values, achievements, power, influence
Te ao hurihuri	contemporary influences within today's society
Koha	donation
Te reo	the Maori language
Haka	a dance, or a song accompanied by dance
Kakano	the seed
Kapahaka	Maori performing arts and literally means to form a line and dance
Pakeha	a white New Zealander as opposed to a Maori